MURDER CASE ADVANCED.

Supreme Court to Hear Appeal of Frederick Long on April 6.

Frederick Lang, convicted of shooting and killing his niece, Kate Gordon, near New Brunswick, N. J., in April, 1906, in a jealous rage. The girl lived at Dunham Hill, outside

New Brunswick, with her parents. With a younger sister, she was about to board New a trolley car to take her to work when asks to Lang followed and killed her.

This appeal is based on the fact that two members of the jury that tried him were above the sixty-five-year age limit prescribed by New Jersey law, which he claims makes his trial and sentence to death illegal. The courts of the State owever, upheld the validity of the further proviso in the law, which makes it necessary that such eligibility must be challenged before the jury is accepted, and affirmed the validity of his sentence.
